

When I first heard my home town was building a LPFM station I was so excited. An opportunity to start a local non profit community based organization is just the thing this town needs to foster a sense of creativity imagination and community. With Regards to translator licences, I feel that locally based media initiatives will prove to be larger community assets then non locally produced programming. The reason being that while broadcast spectrum is scarce, it seems only fair to give people access to the airwaves that surround them. When people invest time in their community it isn't long before they invest money.
